• Each year the competition to win basketball scholarships at every level becomes more intense. Every legitimate means of gaining an edge toward securing an education and the opportunity to play at college level is an investment in your future.

• Only a handful of players win D-1 scholarships each year. It is a difficult jump from high school to college in any sport. Basketball is the most limited in terms of scholarships available.

• Using NCAA figures from their own "participation rate" study and "probability of competing beyond high school," the NCAA estimates that 2.9% of high school seniors will compete at some level in college.

• If our student/athletes get the message sooner rather than later about the numbers, they can positively affect what they have control over. The keys are academics, skills training and nutrition. Winning a college scholarship is not just about ability. The quality of effort expended can and will improve your odds. It's time to get "EXPOSED"
